

A Rainy Start, but a Memorable Trip to Vienna

In this third blog post, I'd like to talk about the first trip I took with my friends. To begin with, the reason why we didn't take the time to travel earlier is this: we were waiting for the temperatures to rise so we could fully enjoy the visits and match our sunglasses with our outfits. Unfortunately, the weekend we finally decided to go was really rainy...

So, I was lucky enough to go to Austria — more precisely, to Vienna — two weeks ago. During that weekend, I had the chance to see some huge and beautiful palaces, such as Schönbrunn Palace and the Belvedere Palace. Schönbrunn Palace was the summer residence of the Habsburg family and shows the power and luxury of the Austrian Empire. The Belvedere Palace is famous for its beautiful gardens and its art museum, which includes works by Klimt.

We also walked through the streets of Vienna to see the monuments the city has to offer. Unfortunately, it was raining, but I'm still happy to say that I have great memories of it. Luckily, the second day was sunny, and we really made the most of it by walking around and joining a festival that celebrates the culture of the Styria region (its name: Steiermark Frühling). I got to taste some local specialties from this region, which is known as "the green heart of Austria.

I think I'll take some time to travel more in the coming weeks. First, because of the school holidays we're going to have, and also because the good weather will make me want to discover other cities and countries. I'm thinking about visiting Lake Balaton, which is very well-known in Hungary, and also going to Croatia and Greece
